LONDON LIFE.

The Handel Musical Festival and Its Ever-Recurring Success.

A Grateful Tribute to the Memory of Sidney Colman and His Works.

Miss Dale About Matthew Arnold, Who Will Soon Lecture in America.

Sir Isaac S. Ashmy and Mrs. Stanton Are Being Received in England—Fair Reciprocal Notes.

LONDON, June 26.—[Special Correspondence.]—The old Crystal Palace has just again been to its triennial glory. The Handel Festival has been a marked and, indeed, memorable occasion. It has involved a higher interest both professionally and publicly than ever before in the vast annals of a century. The Crystal Palace is not what it once was. Indeed it is to decay. The quarter betting, still a source of excitement and conversation, still desperately favorable and curious, record much longer hold to stand among the sights and wonders of London. It has never said since it was brought in to stand as a place for grandeur of art, amusements, and entertainments. The respect for the immense structure and vast grounds have to locate, and they are only a white elephant. However, Crystal Palace success or ruin is to the history and glory every time years, when a great section of its tenant rose to the sentiments and questions, and when this occasion, having undergone interior transformation, became the theatre for the Handel Festival.

Hard a building a little section of which will seat 5,000 people, and hence this extraordinary concern, with its lofty glass dome and its vast glass walls, profusely ornamented with every species of flower, and gilded, and now, and with every species of flag and banner, and entertainment, and you have a picture of the place of this festival, which is an immense and an eclipse to the way as the building itself. The chorus on this festival against some 4,000 voices, and the audiences at each exhibition numbered from 20,000 to 25,000 people.

Under it will a favorite with the English people. Handel's method of treatment and the treatment itself is English rather than German. His selection are large in outline and yet are always picturesque, and so adapted to the English voice. Indeed, Handel's oratorios would not be popular in England if they were not. "The Messiah" and "Israel in Egypt" will survive all changes of musical treatment and taste, and even more modern composers will find much attractive and characteristic art there of the last century.

Sir Michael Costa gave place to Mr. Barnby as conductor, and though Mr. Barnby has not quite had much to do professionally as a conductor these engagements make the head of the six festivals. Barnby, the chorus were given to excitement and when the festival was over, the praises of Sir Michael Costa was little noticed, and Mr. Barnby is now very well here and Sir Michael has been the first and conductor for an event that has at last the general public did not seem to understand Sir Michael Costa's and consequently there was more life than freshness.

Mr. Barnby took the leading of the tenor and Miss Albani of all the leading soprano, Madame Patey and Miss Hilda Wilson and Miss Valleria and Mr. Santley and Mr. Lloyd were all in active, and Mr. Barnby was in the best of the singers. The leading of the chorus was in the hands of Mr. Barnby, and the leading of the chorus was in the hands of Mr. Barnby, and the leading of the chorus was in the hands of Mr. Barnby, and the
